Manifesto for Events Director 09-10, SciSoc

After attending several of SciSoc's events I really wanted to get involved in the society and I think the best position for me is as events director. Working for Starchaser Industries Ltd (a British rocket company) throughout my time at college has given me 'hands-on' experience of communicating with scientists and corresponding with institutions that may be interested in their services. Dealing with the general public and with problems that can develop has become second nature from many years working as a customer service advisor. I am an enthusiastic, approachable person who has a passion for science, helping out at various science days around Cambridge and on projects to get young people more interested in science and higher education.

As events director I would continue James' fantastic line up of speakers, and plan well ahead so SciSoc could present some of the best lectures in Cambridge. Also I'd like to target those students that don't want to attend the evening lectures because as a science society we should bring all sorts of scientists together! Social events, such as bar nights, would be as much as a priority as the lectures and hopefully this would bring SciSoc to a much wider audience. Making members more aware of how they can get involved with SciSoc at each event, and encouraging members to come along to the general committee meetings would also be one of my goals.

Helping out at the last event and attending the last few general committee meetings have shown me that SciSoc is really fun and I hope you will elect me as the next events director.
